to Westport Light and Westhaven state parks

Westport Light and Westhaven state parks sit along the shores of the Pacific Ocean and are connected by a 1.3-mile dune trail with viewing platforms and interpretive displays. Westport Light (212 acres) is best known for the historic Westport Lighthouse, while Westhaven (79 acres) is an extremely popular surfing spot with its rolling breakers from the Pacific Ocean.

Both parks offer panoramic views of the Pacific Ocean and easy pedestrian access to the beach. Sea kayakers, paddlers and surfers are drawn to the crashing waves, while land recreationists enjoy flying kites, horseback riding, bird watching, beach walking and picnicking. Visitors also enjoy crabbing in Half Moon Bay at Westhaven.

Park history

Westport Light is named for the historic Westport Lighthouse (also called Grays Harbor Lighthouse) built in 1898 and adjacent Westport Light on Coast Guard property. The lighthouse was built as a navigational aide for Point Chehalis at the south entrance to Grays Harbor Westhaven was created by accreted land. During the 1940s, a jetty was built to protect Grays Harbor. The jetty caused land accretion, which became the park.
